Colour: Where to start?

A wall is a blank canvas just begging for life.

Choosing colour and designs for your house can be a daunting task.

Of course you want it to reflect your style and personality and you want it to have that "wow" factor.

Go Arty has some tips that can help you choose the right colours.

First, lose your fear of colour. We live surrounded by it. The trick is finding the family of colour closest to your heart.

A colour wheel or colour chart will be a great help. They have many uses, however they don't show the way light moves around your home, the shape of the rooms or the possessions you already have that may be comfortably integrated.

Begin planning by gathering together items from all over the house that you love for their colour.

These might be favourite clothes or scarves, pots or plates, cushions etc...

Open your wardrobe and look at the colours you like wearing – this should give you a clue as to how brave and sassy you would like to be.

Clear a table and make a sort of still life arrangement of all these goodies.

Now just add, reject and generally mess around with the assortment until you begin to recognise which colour and combination you are drawn to.

Many people think there are definite rules about colour and they worry about breaking them.

You can, in fact, put any colour together as long as they have the same depth of tone.
